The Mental Capacity Act and minority ethnic communities

A report published by the Mental Health Foundation describes the views of people from black and minority ethnic (BME) communities towards the Mental Capacity Act, which determines under which circumstances people with mental health problems can be judged to lack the capacity to make decisions for themselves, often about their treatment.